HOUSE AG COMMITTEE HOLDS HEARING ON POTENTIAL SNAP MODERNIZATION

This week, the Department of Education (ED) announced funding opportunities to support student well-being through full-service community schools and address educator recruitment, retention, and career advancement. On Wednesday, the ED released a Notice Inviting Applications for the fiscal year 2023 Full-Service Community Schools grant program that supports academic acceleration and provides academic and whole child supports to build and strengthen connections between schools, parents, families, and their surrounding communities. The program advances Secretary Cardona’s Raise the Bar initiative and enhances community-based resources to support student’s academic advancement and mental health. The following day, ED also announced the availability of more than $368 million in new grant opportunities through the Education Innovation and Research (EIR) program and the Teacher and School Leader (TSL) Incentive program that increases investments in teacher recruitment and retention. The Department states that these grant programs are tied to increased compensation and specifically prioritize educator diversity, career advancement, and leadership opportunities for effective educators. More information on the Full-Service Community Schools grant program can be found here. More information on the EIR and TSL is here.

HOUSE AG COMMITTEE HOLDS HEARING ON POTENTIAL SNAP MODERNIZATION

On Wednesday, June 7, the House Agriculture Committee hosted a hearing titled, “Innovation, Employment, Integrity, and Health: Opportunities for Modernization in Title IV.” The hearing focused on Farm Bill nutrition programs and follows contentious negotiations on debt limit legislation from the previous week that significantly relied on agreeing to certain changes to the Department of Agriculture’s Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP). The witness panel featured doctors and executives representing different areas of children and family services, food banks, and agriculture. Witness testimony primarily addressed accessibility to SNAP, progressing employment through SNAP, and access to healthy food options through SNAP by agricultural advancement. Republicans on the panel pushed for the modernization of food assistance programs through connecting individuals on these programs to employers, creating a healthy food safety net, and being able to individualize these services to those in need. Meanwhile, Committee Democrats mainly spoke to the accessibility of SNAP programs and how Congress can more effectively deliver it to individuals with disabilities, minorities, and veterans. Committee Chairman GT Thompson (R-PA) stated in his opening remarks that “we must continue to continuously explore how to serve eligible recipients through innovation and flexibility.” Ranking Member David Scott (D-GA) agreed with most points made by Chair Thompson, but reiterated that “Democrats stand united against any efforts to take food away from veterans, from children, or any families that are vulnerable in America.” Following witness testimony, Committee members posed a variety of questions spanning from monthly dollar allowances for SNAP participants to raising the overall health net of foods in the SNAP system. At the hearing’s conclusion, witnesses and Committee members agreed that by focusing on the principle of innovating SNAP programs rather than partisan politics, substantial policy changes will be successfully implemented into the 2023 Farm Bill.

2. Budget and Appropriations Wrap-Up
In the wake of the enactment of the Fiscal Responsibility Act, House Republicans are deciding how to proceed with the development and consideration of FY 2024 appropriations bills. Even though the legislation applies statutory caps for FY 2024 and 2025 for defense and non-defense discretionary funding, GOP leadership is still debating internally whether the non-defense cap is too high. They are reportedly considering producing FY 2024 appropriations bills that do not exceed FY 2022 levels. That would be bad news for education advocates.

Before the debt limit negotiations were complete, House appropriators had marked up four of the twelve government funding bills. House Appropriations Committee Chair Kay Granger (R-TX) reportedly plans to decide by the end of this week when to restart the process of producing and marking up bills, and what the total level of spending will be. That means House markups could start this week or next week. The Senate has not announced its schedule, but the Senate Appropriations Committee chair and ranking member had previously signaled plans to mark up all twelve bills and to work collaboratively. The House doesn’t necessarily share those goals.

In the meantime, this week, the House Education and the Workforce Committee will turn to higher education issues as the Subcommittee on Higher Education and Workforce Development hosts a hearing titled, “Postsecondary Innovation: Preparing Today’s Students for Tomorrow’s Opportunities.” Committee Chair Virginia Foxx (R-NC) has said she’d like to pursue higher education policy changes this Congress; this hearing will likely reveal some themes for those efforts.

How does this impact State School Board Associations?
Education advocates are bracing for a House-proposed Labor, Health and Human Services and Education bill that will almost certainly have no increases for education. In fact, this is a year when level funding might be considered a win for many programs. Of course, there are many months between now and when FY 2024 spending will be resolved, so stakeholders will continue to make their case throughout the summer and fall.
3. In Brief – Last Week in Washington

SENATE HELP EXPLORES CAUSES, SOLUTIONS TO YOUTH MENTAL HEALTH CRISIS

On Thursday, June 8, the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee held a hearing titled, “Why Are So Many American Youth in a Mental Health Crisis? Exploring Causes and Solutions.” The hearing addressed rising suicide rates among young people and widening gaps in mental health care accessibility. It also adds to a live discussion on youth mental health that Committee Chairman Bernie Sanders (I-VT) held in April with U.S. Surgeon General Vivek Murthy. Murthy, along with Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services Deputy Assistant Secretary Katherine Neas, testified during the first half of Thursday’s hearing. Murthy expressed serious concern about social media’s harmful impact on youth mental health and pointed to data showing that youth who spend more than three hours a day on social media face double the risk of experiencing symptoms of depression and anxiety. Neas shared Department of Education intervention efforts and voiced the critical need for schools to expand school-based mental health services and ensure that all learning occurs in safe and supportive environments. A second witness panel featured state education officials from Connecticut, Washington, and Louisiana to highlight successful solutions from their respective states. Chairman Sanders’ opening remarks outlined troubling statistics that shed light on the issue and called on Congress to “get its act together,” stating that it is Congress’ job to address the crisis. Ranking Member Bill Cassidy (R-LA) underscored similar data, yet emphasized recent action that Congress has taken to improve mental healthcare access and pressured Congress see this work through and measure its effectiveness before assessing remaining gaps. “Pretending that Congress has not done anything to address youth mental health and that we must start anew ignores our responsibility to make sure the support we have already approved is being used effectively,” Cassidy stated. As is customary, the hearing also touched on partisan and controversial topics largely related to LGBTQ+ adolescents and transgender youth. A recording of the hearing can be found here.
