ED OPENS SCHOOL-BASED MENTAL HEALTH SUPPORT GRANT COMPETITION

On Thursday, the Department of Education (ED) opened applications for the School-Based Mental Health Services Grant Program (SBMH) and the Mental Health Service Professional Demonstration Grant Program (MHSP) to help bolster the pipeline of mental health professionals serving in schools and expand student access to school-based mental health services and supports. These programs align with the Biden Administration's commitment to address the mental health crisis, particularly among youth, as outlined in the President’s National Mental Health Strategy. ED anticipates allocating approximately $38 million across both competitions in Fiscal Year 2024, and funding will play a key role in the training of school-based mental health service providers and expanding the number of these professionals available to address the shortages in schools across the country. Prioritizing increased partnership with Historically Black Colleges and Universities, Tribal Colleges and Universities, Hispanic Serving Institutions, and other minority serving institutions, the grants additionally aim to promote inclusive practices and increase the number of mental health professionals from diverse backgrounds or districts they serve, and build upon the progress established by the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act.
Applications for SBMH are here, and due on April 30, 2024 and applications for MHSP are here, and due on May 15, 2024.

2. Budget and Appropriations Wrap-Up

Once again, Congress has managed to avert an appropriations crisis of its own making. Last week, the House and Senate passed another continuing resolution (CR) that avoids shutting down any federal agencies while lawmakers continue to work on Fiscal Year (FY) 2024 spending bills. A Wednesday announcement from Speaker of the House Mike Johnson (R-LA) shared details of the agreement that gives lawmakers until March 8 to pass a package of six spending bills—bills that were released late Sunday night and include the subcommittees of the Agriculture-Food & Drug Administration, Commerce-Justice and Science, Energy and Water Development, Interior, Military Construction-Veterans Affairs, and Transportation-Housing and Urban Development. The other six bills, including the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education spending bill, must be finished by March 22 to avoid any agency closures. On the floor of the Senate, Appropriations Committee Chair Patty Murray (D-WA) said, "We are genuinely close...And if bipartisan cooperation prevails, I am very confident we can, at long last — at long last — wrap up our FY 24 bills.” Both chambers overwhelmingly passed the latest two-part stopgap funding patch on Thursday. The Senate passed the measure 77-13, after the House did so via a 320-99 vote. Consideration of the first six compromise FY 24 bills will begin this week under “suspension” in the House, which will require a two-thirds affirmative vote and then advance to the Senate. While advocates are still analyzing the full impact, overall these bills represent a small 0.3% increase in funding levels over the FY 23 enacted funding. The most important impact for children and families is the full funding of the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infant, and Children also known as the WIC Program, which will ensure no families in the program lose critical support for food aid.

While the CR was mostly clean, it did adjust the amount of dollars appropriated for the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA). FAFSA processing has been maligned with processing issues this year. In response, lawmakers want to give the program more money. FAFSA appropriations for FY 2023 and subsequent years are currently set at $1.17 billion. The CR would make spending changes and set totals at $1.17 billion for fiscal 2024, $3.17 billion for fiscal 2025, $2.17 billion for fiscal 2026 and $1.24 billion for fiscal 2027 and subsequent years.
The Department of Education is experiencing delays in processing financial aid data, meaning colleges won’t get the information they need to produce financial aid packages until early March, upending the financial aid process and timelines nationwide.

The fact that Speaker Johnson has had to rely on Democrats to avoid a shutdown and will likely need their support for passage of the first six spending bills, “becomes an opportunity for negotiations,” according to House Appropriations Committee Ranking Member Rosa DeLauro (D-CT). She and her colleagues are hoping to rid bills of conservative policy riders and prevent some of the most troubling proposed cuts for Democrats—including those proposed to Title I by Republicans in the education spending bill they proposed last year. (Of course, those cuts would never clear the Democratically-controlled Senate.)

This week will also see President Joe Biden visit Capitol Hill for his March 7 State of the Union Address. Senator Katie Britt (R-AL) will be delivering the Republican response. In the days before the address, the White House will announce who will be sitting with First Lady Jill Biden in the galley. Those announcements will give some clues to the substance of the President’s speech. Education will certainly be featured, given the Administration’s emphasis on equity in K-12 education, afterschool and summer learning, addressing the learning loss resulting from the pandemic, the need to grow a workforce that can fulfill the promise of the much-touted CHIPS and Science Act, and many other Biden policy priorities. Hopefully lawmakers won’t need the floor time Thursday night to avoid a partial shutdown on Friday.

How does this impact State School Board Associations?
Looking ahead, the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education spending bill is among the largest and most politically fraught of the spending bills. It was reported this week that Subcommittee Chairman Robert Aderholt (R-AL) said appropriators are getting closer to an agreement on the programmatic funding details for his bill, but policy riders will certainly present challenges. Varied controversial issues such as critical race theory, transgender athletes, and gun policy are among those being negotiated in these final days.

3. In Brief – Last Week in Washington
ED RELEASES RESOURCES ON PRESCHOOL EXPANSION, EARLY SUCCESS
The Department of Education (ED) on Monday published resources for how states, local educational agencies (LEAs), and schools can use Title I funds to expand access to high-quality preschool for three- and four-year olds in a range of quality settings including schools, Head Start, and community-based organizations. “This guidance will help ensure more children can experience early school success, and it encourages more schools across the nation to better set up kindergarten to be a sturdy bridge between the early years and the early grades,” the press release states. The new resources include a revision of ED’s Non-Regulatory Guidance on Serving Preschool Children Through Title I, Part A (Title I) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA), which was last revised in 2012. The updated guidance comes after President Biden’s Executive Order to Increase Access to High-Quality Care and Supporting Caregivers, and efforts are being coordinated with the Department of Health and Human Services. The guidance includes information on how local and state education agencies can partner with local preschool programs, Head Start, and other community-based organizations to expand access to preschool opportunities through layering and braiding federal, state, and local funds. It additionally outlines how Title I funds can be used to support the professional development and growth of early educators and highlights ways to meet the developmental and linguistic needs of preschool students, especially children with disabilities and English learners.
An Early School Success Dear Colleague Letter accompanies the updated guidance and provides further details.

ED RELEASES RESOURCES FOR STUDENT VOTERS
The Department of Education (ED) on Monday released a "Toolkit for the Promotion of Voter Participation for Students" to provide resources for educational institutions to help them identify and implement actions to assist eligible students with voter registration and voting. The new resource aims to help both K-12 and postsecondary students engage in the electoral process by reducing barriers they might face when participating in elections. The toolkit includes explanations of current legal requirements for schools, recommendations for non-partisan steps they can take to expand voter participation across their student bodies, federal resources they can utilize to support voters in their communities, and examples from the field with effective strategies from schools across the nation. Based on President Biden's executive order, "Promoting Access to Voting," which called on federal agencies to consider ways to expand opportunities for all Americans to register to vote and to obtain information about, and participate in, the electoral process ED has taken several steps to expand voting access for all students. These actions included adding a link to vote.gov on the Federal Student Aid website to make information about voting more accessible to college students; issuing a Dear Colleague Letter to remind institutions of higher education of the federal requirements regarding voting that are tied to participation in federal student aid programs; and clarifying when Federal Work Study dollars could be used for nonpartisan civic engagement work. The toolkit is available here.

PRINCIPALS OUTLINE STRATEGIES FOR OVERCOMING CHRONIC ABSENTEEISM
On Tuesday, the National Association of Secondary School Principals held a webinar titled, "Overcoming Chronic Absenteeism: Solutions for School Leaders." The event featured a panel of educators and a team from Attendance Works - Lauran Waters-Cherry, executive vice president of the American Federation of School Administrators (AFSA); Adam Schott, deputy assistant secretary of the US Department of Education’s (ED) Office of Elementary and Secondary Education; Cecelia Leong, vice president of programs at Attendance Works; Hedy Chang, executive director and president of Attendance Works; Victoria Simon, principal at Aberdeen Academy; and Ryan Broderick, assistant principal at Bristol Central High School.
Delving into the growing problem of chronic absenteeism in schools, the speakers shared their experiences with student absenteeism and their strategies to address it. Waters-Cherry began by discussing the link between chronic absence and reduced levels of academic achievement. She emphasized the lasting impact this has on a child's life, as chronically absent students are more likely to drop out of high school. Leong stressed the importance of a tiered approach to address absenteeism: foundational support and school-wide prevention, targeted support, and intensive support. Emphasizing tier one universal strategies, Leong highlighted the role of positive learning conditions in fostering student engagement and regular attendance. Additionally, she underscored the shift towards a partnership-focused approach, advocating for leveraging student strengths and listening to families to overcome attendance barriers. Drawing from their schools’ absentee data, educators Simon and Broderick identified mental health challenges and overall student/parent attitudes towards school as key factors contributing to absenteeism. As a result of these findings, they highlighted the need to develop individual relationships and foster community building in schools, have robust, up-to-date data to identify students who may require more attention, and have consistent messaging on the importance of education in shaping a child’s future. Both educators concluded by emphasizing the effectiveness of setting small, actionable goals each month and recognizing that addressing chronic absenteeism is a gradual process.
